READ THIS

From "Women's Wear"

There are two kinds of department stores engaged in the present struggle for survival. The one aims to sell to the general public anything it can sell at an apparent profit. The other aims to buy for its element of the community those articles of merchandise which will give the utmost service and satisfaction to normal, intelligent persons.

The spirit of service, the intelligence used in selecting and adapting an article to the consumer's personal service primarily governs its value.

A Ground Floor Shop—As Exclusive as Any in Town

Not so new as the Men's and Boys' Clothing Shops on the second floor of the new building—old enough to be known to the wholesale trade as distributing more Men's Neckwear than any other establishment in Washington.

Headquarters for Smoking Jackets and Bath Robes

Recognized by the most famous importer and maker of these garments—complimented by him, when this new shop's chief was lately invited to New York to arrange for the distribution of his entire remaining Christmas stock. The distribution, to begin tomorrow morning, assures very much the greatest variety in town and very much the lowest prices.
